

Discuss when, if ever, capital punishment can be viewed as a valid punishment for crime.

"To err is human". Generally, criminals should be punished if we want to have a non-violent society. However, it is important who are allowed to punish offenders. Although, majority of people praise capital punishment as the most appropriate punishment for culprits, from my point of view, decreeing this sentence is not acceptable, except for some harsh immoral acts.

First, by virtue of being human, it is inevitable to commit mistakes at any stage of our life. Regarding the complications of our brains, analyzing the variety of people's manner to react to the same circumstance is not completed by scientists. Thus, it is not surprising to face different illegal responses, cruel moral or ethical and legal reactions from the same situation. Though sometimes people perform their reactions deliberately and not unintentionally, executing a person cannot render the situation better; it just makes another criminal so insensible.

As a man chastened his son, so that the Lord thy God chastened thee. Ethically, we are not allowed to deprive the people of their property, so, how can we let ourselves take their life? According to this concept, capital punishment which offenders are executed doesn't comply with any ethical and moral rules.

If he -who breaks the law-, is not punished- he who obeys it is cheated. This and this alone, is why lawbreakers ought to be punished. Some criminals commit crime deliberately. Moreover, they completely destroy the peaceful settlement of the world. A perfect instance is lots of dictators who kill millions of innocent people for their personal ambitious power-gathering; therefore, to authenticate peace among the whole world, capital punishment is of course quite eligible for them.

To sum up, I am strong of the belief that condemning the culprits to capital punishment is a common way to attack with committing crime that is raising; it, however, depicts ethical manner at the worst pattern by taking their lives. We can rehabilitate offenders' manner to captive them and force them to work hard instead of executing them.
