

A gift (such as a camera, a soccer ball, or an animal) can contribute to a child's development. What gift would you give to help a child develop? Why? Use reasons and specific examples to support your choice.

Choosing a gift that helps a child to get amused and to learn at the same time might seem difficult. However, in my opinion, games and toys have always been an indispensable inspiration in our early life; the more inventive they are, the more windows they open to our world. Among all those childhood toys, nonetheless, "puzzle" has turned out to be one of my favorites that I would like to give to a child as a gift.

While making a puzzle, a child needs to think, besides following a pre-defined pattern. Another point is that at the same time of enjoying the completion process that ends up with a beautiful picture, the kid learns to utterly concentrate on how to find the proper piece and the right match to fill empty gaps. Being patient is another great concept of making a puzzle.

From a philosophic view, a puzzle is an illustration of any human beings life. It has its own pattern to follow and any stage of our life is like those pieces that fill the gaps and at the end there will be a picture that can tell the story of our life.

To conclude, toys are close friends of any child. A puzzle, specifically, gives the child an area to learn how to think, to concentrate, and to be patient and alongside enjoying it.
