

Recent figures show an increase in violent crime among youngsters under the age of 18. Some psychologists claim that the basic reason for this is that children these days are not getting the social and emotional learning they need from parents and teachers.

No one can ignore this inevitable fact that unfortunately throughout the recent years the felony rate is noticeably climbing among young children. Frequently, we can get the horrible news from the media on irreparable and hazardous illegal events committed youth from media across the globe -- and in the under-developed countries in especial. Although some people surmise that these kinds of unusual behaviors are directly related to the nurturing and parent's consideration, from where I stand, there are still other effective factors in this giant social conundrum.

Perhaps the first and most noteworthy reason resides in the widespread employing of diverse types of video games, not to mention the Internet, as the monumental leisure time activities among most people particularly youth. Psychologically, it is proven fact that over-using of these games most of which are created based on the dangerous and aggressive manners can beget the violence and some consequences for instance tendency to the using drugs, rubbery and sometimes killing the other classmates at school. Furthermore, the remarkable escalation of the murder shots as well as using the cigarette and other sort of drugs scenes in recent produced movies can play an indispensable role to drive youngsters to the unlawful activities which , in some drastic occasions, can utterly annihilate their future life.

Beside the role of media on criminal events among children, we cannot be ignorant of the huge responsibility of parents and teachers. It might well argued that if parents and teachers become vigilant on the communal children's characteristics and implement friendly relationship with their peers at the same level of consideration which spend for their academic issues, there would be less offense committed among the youngsters to a great extent.

To wrap up, in my book, the diminishing the felonious conducts among youth not only needs the restricting of the using of video games, but also demands the careful supervision of their seniors.

Comment: The organization of the essay is well-framed, in that the reasons are justifiably well-discussed. The structures are fairly complex, though this complexity does not impede the general understanding of the message. At rare cases, some structures are not “full-fledged”, requiring a bit of a final edition and correction.
